Another country [Medium-DVD] 1 videodisc (87 min.) sound, colour ; 4 ¾ in.

Summary: Julian Mitchell's successful West End play, "Another country", was supposedly inspired by the early friendship of Guy Burgess and Donald Maclean who, while in the British diplomatic service, spied for the U.S.S.R. and, in the 1950s, defected to Moscow before they could be arrested. Mitchell postulated that Burgess became a traitor to his class, as well as to his country, at least partly in protest against the hypocrisy he encountered while attending one of Britain's exclusive public schools. The play is set in the 1930s, with Burgess surrogate Guy Bennett (Rupert Everett), a romantic and hedonistic boy nearing the end of his penultimate year at school, looking forward to becoming a prefect and a member of the ruling élite as a first step towards a glittering diplomatic career. His closest companion is Tommy Judd (Colin Firth), a committed Marxist, who despises most aspects of the prevailing system. Bennett falls in love with a younger boy and though homosexuality is wide-spread, his refusal to deny his feelings will ultimately lead to his disgrace. The film is a faithful adaptation of the play and presents an eloquent attack on the public school and its values. Scripted by Mitchell himself, it was directed by Marek Kaniévski, who had a background in television. Rupert Everett recreated his stage role for the film version, with Colin Firth taking the part played by Kenneth Branagh in the West End production. The film was Britain's official entry in the 1984 Cannes Film Festival, where cinematographer Peter Biziou won an award for his contribution.

Boekherstelwerk, met Theuns Botha [Medium-DVD] 1 videoskyf (66 min) klank, kleur; 4 ¾ in Theuns Botha, streekbibliotekaris in Oudtshoorn, bied gereeld werkwinkels oor die herstelwerk van boeke aan. Oor die jare het hy baie ondervinding opgedoen en is nou 'n kundige op die gebied. Hierdie program bied 'n oorsig van al die praktiese tegnieke en wenke wat hy gedurende so 'n werkwinkel aan die hand doen. Dit begin met 'n inleiding tot die fisiese struktuur van 'n boek en hoe boeke beskerm en versorg behoort te word, en behandel dan breedvoerig alle aspekte van herstelwerk wat biblioteek personeel en vrywilligers self kan doen. Dit bespreek alles, van die eenvoudige vervanging van plastiek- omslae en die herstel van stofomslae en bladsye, tot die versterking van hingsels, die herbinding van katernes en ander gevorderde herstelwerk.

Cat Ballou [Medium-DVD] 1 videodisc (92 min.) sound, colour ; 4 ¾ in Summary: Wyoming, 1894. Educated to be a teacher, Catherine Ballou (Jane Fonda) returns home to find her rancher father threatened with eviction by the Wolf City Development Corporation, which is after his water rights. When it becomes clear that the danger is real, Cat decides to hire a gunman to protect her father and writes to Kid Shelleen (Lee Marvin), the hero of the pulp novel she has been reading. Unfortunately, the legendary Shelleen is now an ageing, drunken bum, who literally can't hit the side of a barn when first asked to demonstrate his prowess with a six-shooter. Also on Cat's side are her father's ranchhand, Jackson Two-Bears (Tom Nardini) and two young would-be outlaws, Clay Boone (Michael Callan) and his uncle, Jed (Dwayne Hickman), whom she met on the train journey home. When, in spite of their efforts, Frankie Ballou (John Marley) is killed, Cat swears revenge. Almost the entire film is told in flashback, with Nat King Cole - in his last film appearance - and Stubby Kaye as two strolling minstrels providing a linking device as they sing "The ballad of Cat Ballou", which was also the title of the novel by Roy Chanslor, on which Walter Newman and Frank R. Pierson based their screenplay. A good-natured, rumbustious parody of the traditional western, the film proved to be a resounding commercial success. Jane Fonda is endearing as the wide-eyed, innocent Catherine Ballou who takes on the villains with excited determination and for Lee Marvin his role as the dishevelled vagabond who gathers himself together for one last stand against the opposition's gunfighter led to an Academy Award and stardom. The director, Elliot Silverstein, has made a few films for the cinema, including the western "A man called Horse" (1970), but has done most of his work for television.

Fateless [Medium-DVD] 1 videodisc (134 min.)
Based on Hungarian Jewish author Imre Kertesz's experiences in World War 2, this film tells the story of 14-year-old Gyuri who is sent to various Nazi concentration camps. He survives the brutality of the camps by cutting himself off from every emotion, and maintaining the stubborn belief that "there's nothing too unimaginable to endure". At the end of the war he struggles to come to terms with his traumatic experiences, and sometimes thinks nostalgically of the camaraderie amongst prisoners in the death camps.

The leopard [Medium-DVD] 1 videodisc (178 min.) : sound, colour, 4 3/4 in.
The Leopard chronicles the fortunes of Prince Fabrizio Salina and his family during the unification of Italy in the 1860s, the picture opens as Salina (Burt Lancaster) learns that Garibaldi's troops have embarked in Sicily. While the Prince sees the event as an obvious threat to his current social status, his opportunistic nephew Tancredi (Alain Delon) becomes an officer in Garibaldi's army and returns home a war hero. Tancredi starts courting the beautiful Angelica (Claudia Cardinale), a daughter of the town's newly appointed Mayor, Don Calogero Sedara (Paolo Stoppa). Though the Prince despises Don Calogero as an upstart who made a fortune on land speculation during the recent social upheaval, he reluctantly agrees to his nephew's marriage, understanding how much this alliance would mean for the impecunious Tancredi. Painfully realizing the aristocracy's obsolescence in the wake of the new class of bourgeoisie, the Prince later declines an offer from a governmental emissary to become a senator in the new Parliament in Turin. Burt Lancaster is magnificent in the first of his patriarchal roles, and the rest of the cast, especially Delon and Cardinale, become almost perfect incarnations of the novel's characters. Filmed in glorious Techniscope and rich in period detail, the film is a remarkable cinematic achievement in all departments.

A passage to India [Medium-DVD] 1 videodisc (157 min.) sound, colour ; 4 ¾ in Summary: E.M. Forster's last novel was published in 1924. It preceded the partition of India by more than twenty years and the liberal values it espoused, as well as its acknowledgement of Indian nationalism, were ahead of its time. This, however, was not the real theme of the book, which comprises a complex study of relationships in transition, both individual and communal. In the early 1920s, Adela Quested accompanies her future mother-in-law, Mrs. Moore, to the city of Chandrapore, where her intended fiancé is the City Magistrate. Introduced to the jingoistic British community, the two women quickly tire of the social life and, longing to see the real India, accept an impulsive invitation by the eager and naive Dr. Aziz, a Moslem surgeon, to accompany him on a picnic to the Marabar Caves. Entering one of the passages alone, Adela has a terrifying experience, which results in Dr. Aziz being charged with assaulting her. Mrs. Moore, who believes him to be innocent, will have no part in the proceedings, and by the time Aziz comes to trial, she has left India. The case quickly becomes a 'cause célèbre', with most of the English community on the one side and the Indians on the other. When, while on the witness stand, Adela has the courage to admit that her accusation was unjust, her countrymen close ranks against her, with only the sympathetic principal of the college, Richard Fielding, befriending her. This causes a falling out between him and Aziz, though they are eventually reconciled. David Lean's film version, which also drew on the play by Santha Rama Rau, had its critics as well as its defenders, but proved to be a box office success. It received eleven Academy Award nominations, with Oscars going to Peggy Ashcroft as Best Supporting Actress and to Maurice Jarre for his musical score. Besides Ashcroft, others in the cast are Judy Davis, Victor Banerjee, James Fox, Alec Guinness and Nigel Havers..
