he legislation that regulated Cape Town City Libraries in the years 1942 to 1972 and which determined who they were allowed to serve, as well as where and what, is cringeworthy (see article by Kathleen Laishley on page 13) and is an affirmation of a thought process by correspondent Francois Verster during a quiet moment at the Bloemfontein Book Festival: ‘These days politics colour everything’, and his immediate musings thereafter that in fact it is not the case, it has always been like that. As the French say, the more things change the more they remain the same — dis net ander rolspelers wat kans kry om dieselfde ou rolle te vertolk...

On ‘n meer positiewe noot — ‘n mens kan nie anders nie as om geïnspireer te raak as jy lees van bibliotekarisse se blymoedigheid ten spyte van soms haglike omstandighede in lande in sub-Sahara Afrika. Christelle Lubbe vertel van haar ondervindings tydens die eerste ooit sub-Sahara Internasionale Netwerk van Ontlukende Innoevers-program wat in Uganda aangebied is en deur bibliotekarisse uit veertien lande bygewon is. Deel haar ervaring in The Pearl of Africa op bladsy 53.

Khayelitsha with almost 191,000 visitors to date. Remarkable! From the minute the doors open the library is abuzz with users and after only ten months in use boasts a membership of 3,423 and a circulation figure of 50,329. Dynamic librarian Thandiwe Mtshengu, the driving force behind this success story, tells us more on page 48.

Finally our own success story — Hospital Street Depot (an in-house depot at our Head Office), celebrates its 50th birthday this year (page 46). Congratulations and thank you to the dedicated staff, Sandy Kingswell and Gerda Theron as well as their predecessor, the energetic Penny Joerning (now retired), for looking after their readers’ needs in such a caring manner.

ie wetgewing wat in die jare 1942 tot 1972 bepaal het wie deur Kaapstad bibliotekede bedien mag word, asook watter materiaal en waar, laat ‘n mens omtrent nl. (Sien artikel op bladsy 13 deur bibliotekaris Kathleen Laishley). Dit bevestig die gedagterigting van Francois Verster tydens ‘n stil oomblik by die Bloemfonteins Boekfees (bladsy 29): ‘Politiek kleur alles in deesdae’ en toe korrigeer hy homself en dink dat dit maar altyd so was. Goos die Franse sê — hoe meer dinge verander hoe meer bly hulle weerman.

Ons eie suksesstorie — ons vier vanjaar die 50e bestaansjaar van die Hospitalstraat Depot (‘n in-huise depot by ons Hoofkantoor). Baie geluk en dankie aan die toegegewyde personeel Sandy Kingswell en Gerda Theron sowel as hul voorganger, die energiese Penny Joerning, wat so mooi na hul gebruikers se behoefte omsien.

Editorial policy

The Cape Librarian is the house journal of the Western Cape Library Service and is published bi-monthly. Articles in the field of library and information science, library administration, news items, reviews and access lists are included. The editorial staff reserve the right to edit, shorten, or rewrite any copy should it be deemed necessary. We cannot guarantee that unsolicited copy supplied will be printed. Opinions expressed by contributors are not necessarily those of the Library Service. Copy for a particular issue must reach the editor two months in advance. Articles, letters and news items should be submitted directly to the editor.

Redaksionele beleid

Die Kaapse Bibliotekaris is die huisblad van die Wes-Kaapse Bibliotekaries en verskyn twee-maandeliks. Dit bevat artikels oor bibliotekarie- en inligtingsweergawe, rekenings, reseverse, aanvraaglyste asook praktiese artikels. Die redakteur behoort hom die reg in te om, indien nodig, bydraes te regstel of te kort te kry. Die publikasie van artikels wat nie in opdrag gediision is nie, kan egter nie gewaarborg word nie. Die beskikbaarheid van materiëlike werken is nie noodwendig die van die Bibliotekaries nie. Alle kopie van ‘n bepaalde uitgawe moet die redakteur twee maande vooruit bereik. Artikel, bydrae en reseverse kan direk aan die redakteur gestuur word.
always do it. I can’t help it. Whenever I visit new acquaintances I look at their bookshelves. This is the book lover’s variation on the theme of visitors who make a point of going to the bathroom whenever they visit new friends, as an excuse to have a look at the house.

You can learn so much from someone’s books. That is, if they happen to have books, but fortunately, most of the people I know tend to have books. If people don’t have books, it says much about them anyway.

When I look at someone’s books, I do not only look at what books they have, but also at how their books are organised. Now you’re thinking: ‘Mmm, he’s a librarian, he wants everything to be Dewey-perfect.’ Not at all. Libraries should be Dewey-perfect, not necessarily private collections at home.

A home collection is bound to have some type of organising system and figuring that out is just where the fun and games begin. How someone’s books are organised (or not) tells you exactly what kind of person you are dealing with. It also tells you what type of books you are likely to find on the shelves.

If the book collection is super organised, neat and tidy, you can be sure it belongs to a strict, disciplined person who likes to be in control of everything, including life (actually, who likes to think they are in control of life — their own and those around them!) It doesn’t matter how the books are organised; it could be according to size, colour, subject or alphabetically, but the chosen system will be strictly implemented.
There are further dimensions to this scenario. If all the books are on the shelves, with no books lying around on the coffee table or bedside table, it is a sure sign that the books are mostly there to impress and not so much for reading. Chances are that it would mostly be ‘show off’ books, such as encyclopaedias and sets of classics.

The more relaxed, but well-organised reader, on the other hand, would actually have a few books on the coffee or bedside table. It may be squared up with the sides of the coffee table, or at least in a neat little stack. Chances are that they would be ‘how to’ books. Your visit will most probably be fairly formal and to the point. Be sure to obey all the social rules and be on your best behaviour.

On the other end of the spectrum you will find bookshelves that are fairly chaotic, overflowing with far too many books for the available space. There will be books lying horizontally on top of the upright books in the shelves. There will also be stacks of books on top of the shelves, on coffee tables, kitchen tops and dining room tables, even on the floor. These stacks would look haphazard because they just happened with time. The books on the shelves may have been organised according to a system long ago or, if there is still a visible organising system, it would just be sorted in broad categories. Definitely not a fine-tuned system. The selection would include fiction and non-fiction, covering a wide spectrum of weird and wonderful subjects. You will definitely also spot several dictionaries on the tables.

This house belongs to someone with a passion for life, a lively imagination and deep emotions. These people don’t tread lightly on life. They dance and stomp and run and cry and laugh. In the process they leave a heap of books in their wake, because they are information gluttons who want to be knowledgeable about everything. Your visit will be longer than planned and the conversation will be lively and wide-ranging. Of course, at the end of your visit, a few more books would have landed on the stacks.

Somewhere between these two extremes, you will find the house with fairly well-organised bookshelves. It will most probably be organised according to a logical subject system. The shelves will be filled with mostly factual, non-fiction books. You will see some DIY and self-help books. Magazines in the house will most probably be on specific subjects, work or hobby related. Be assured that you will find a fair stack of currently used books in the person’s study. Mostly on the same topic, maybe with a few subject reference books among them. Here we have the task-oriented, logical thinkers. They are focussed on the subject of their interest, be it for work, play or self-improvement.

Take note of the subject at hand. It will come up in the conversation, sooner rather than later. Be prepared for a detailed lecture. If you go to the bathroom, you might find the Guinness Book of Records at hand for light relief.

Finally, we get to the house where the shelves might be fairly well organised, but there will also be framed photos of loved ones and small ornaments with nostalgic significance interspersed between the books. The coffee tables will be strewn with family magazines. The books on the shelves could be romantic love stories, real-life feel-good stories and books on social issues, maybe even some biographies and autobiographies of famous people. These shelves belong to social beings. They are people-oriented, have lots of friends and are involved with society organisations. Be sure to enquire about their loved ones, especially their children or grandchildren, but not if you are in a hurry.

I could carry on indefinitely about the art of reading bookshelves, but I have to go now. I must get my shelves into some basic order before my guests arrive!

Die Rooi Ridder

Ek het die artikel deur Francois Bloemhof oor die plesier waarmee hy en sy vriende die Rooi Ridder-boeke gelees het, baie geniet.

In 1960 het my ouers met my en my jonger suster uit Nederland geëmigreer. My pa het by Sanlam gewerk en daar was 'n klein biblioteek vir personeel en hul families. My pa het 'n aktetas gehad en sodra ek klaar was met my boeke, het ek dit soggens vroeg, voor werk, vir hom gegee en dit het in sy tassie verdwyn. Dan het ek die hele middag na skool in spanning gewag (voor die venster so teen 17:00 uur as hy sou tuiskom) vir my 'nuwe' boeke. Dan het hy die nuwe boeke uit sy tassie gehaal en ek was weer gelukkig. Ek het al die tyd gedink dat hy geweet het watter enorme plesier hy my doen, maar blykbaar was hy totaal onbewus hiervan. Hy was baie verbaas toe ons onlangs daaroor gepraat het.

Ek kan nie onthou of dit uit Sanlam- of Bellville se biblioteek gekom het nie, maar ek was mal oor die Rooi Ridder. Ek sien hulle is in 1964 gepubliseer en dis toe ek my eie drie boeke gekry het — ek is seker my pa het hulle vir my gekoop. Ek moes toe nege jaar oud gewees het. Gaan nie help om hom nou te vra nie, want hy is 84 en taamlik vergeteltyg.

Na Francois se artikel het ek in my kas gaan krap en tot my vreugde my drie boeke weer gevind.

Net gedink ek sal dit met julle deel — ek was ook 'n groot aanhanger.

Ek sien die ‘seëltjies’ waarvan hy melding maak, is ook agter uit my boeke geknip. Dalk wou ek ook aan die orde behoort, maar ek kan nie onthou of so-iets ooit gebeur het nie.

Dankie vir die artikel.

Another stalwart has left

I was so sad to see Jasmina leaving the Library Service as somehow, she was just always part of us. Jasmina started here at a very young age and when I think about her, it brings all kinds of images to mind. Jasmina the young, happy, trendsetter who charmed all the young men and other colleagues at the Library Service. The older Jasmina as a mother and breadwinner who grew up in front of us and managed to maintain that joyfulness and zest for life throughout her working career.

I worked with Jasmina in Selection for five years and her experience and contributions helped a great deal to ease the pressure. For the most part though, we are all in awe at the way she brought up her children and I trust that they will appreciate that as they grow older. Jasmina, I will see you around and I hope that you will be successful in the new endeavours that you plan for the future.

Congratulations to Western Cape Librarian of the Year 2016!

We are super proud to present Mercia Sias as the LIASA Western Cape Librarian of the Year 2016! Steve Jobs said: ‘The only way to do great work is to love what you do’ — that’s our Librarian of the Year, Mercia Sias!

We wish Mercia good luck and best wishes for the upcoming national finals. We know that she will represent the Western Cape very well.

Mercia exudes passion and personality and she does great work in the Drakenstein Library as well as within LIASA

Mercia Sias, LIASA Western Cape Librarian

Malene van Zyl and Cheryl Heymann — a joint tribute

Between the two of them, Malene van Zyl and Cheryl Heymann (née Obermeyer) have served Cape Town City Libraries and the residents of Cape Town for nearly three-quarters of a century until Malene took early retirement in June and Cheryl in July.

There are a number of similarities in their careers — both started off in branch libraries and both finished up in senior management positions. Both displayed a degree of professionalism that proved an inspiration to the staff they managed as well as the senior staff they worked with. Most of all, both made determined efforts to keep pace with the ongoing developments and changes in the Library Service, the Council and the profession.

I am not going to provide a potted post-retirement CV, but am rather going to concentrate on the notable features unique to each of them.

Malene ...

Malene, in that over-used phrase, is a people’s person.
She has always been interested in people — in fact, she once considered personnel work as an option. She got there eventually though by keeping up with developments in human resources as a discipline — teaching herself and supported by the Council’s human resources department with whom she had a mutually beneficial relationship. She ended her library career as senior professional officer of education, training and development, in which post her knowledge of the libraries and their personnel needs came into its own.

Malene is an Afrikaner — proud of her background, culture and language. A keen reader, her knowledge of Afrikaans literature made her a valuable contributor to City Libraries’ book selection team. Malene has an enormous capacity for fun and embraces life with open arms. Now that she has retired the possibilities are endless.

This is how she described her library career in a farewell letter (shortened) to colleagues:

My career was certainly one that I would never have exchanged for any other, although I do have other professional interests as well. During my career I was privileged to be (over and above being a passionate public librarian) an interviewer, a trainer, a counsellor, a ‘judge’ (I believe...), an architect, an interior designer and a building contractor/engineer. All of that contributed to a very interesting and a tremendously fulfilling professional journey. But the fulfilment would not have been complete without you, my colleagues, with whom I was privileged to share this journey.

Cheryl ...

Cheryl is a systems person, but a systems person with heart — who also grew professionally with the development of the Library Service and the demands it made on her. Her most notable accomplishment was the installation of the computerised library system Bookplus virtually on her own. This involved setting up the system, training the staff and managing the operation until a systems administrator was appointed to assist.

Besides her work on Bookplus Cheryl familiarised herself with electronic book resources and generously shared her book knowledge.

She is also of the breed of librarians who read and read widely, adding enormous value to book selection committees. I appreciated our common interest in detective stories long before these stories became popular.

It is a fallacy that on retirement people have the time to read more.

Both Malene and Cheryl will be quickly disabused — if not already — and will discover that retirement is one of the busiest periods in one’s life.

We wish the best for both of them.

Our thanks to Rheina Epstein, correspondent, who retired from Cape Town City Libraries nearly 17 years ago. She worked with both Cheryl and Malene in some capacity, or other during their lengthy tenure. Our very best wishes go with both these accomplished librarians and our wish is that despite what Rheina says, you will have more time to read! ED
Music boffin Luke Townsend retires

Luke Townsend retired recently after 25 or so years of service at Wynberg Library. I have known him since schooldays as we were at the same school, St Joseph’s Marist Brothers in Rondebosch.

He has a great knowledge and understanding of music, particularly jazz and what is called world music, and a passion for Latin American sounds, notably Brazilian or Cuban. He has promoted local and other African music in the library and many users are struck by the variety he created at the library. So much so that Fine Music Radio presenters often come to the library to choose music items for their programmes.

He is, of course, a fine musician in his own right and has recorded albums under the band name of Creeper. He has always been a great fan of Miles Davis and John Coltrane and he can tell you about musicians you may never have heard of, and after hearing them, at times, you wished you had!

He believed in quality and not necessarily the commercial hits. Over the years he developed a collection that included music from all over the world and he did not leave out classical music which, when he started, dominated the library when vinyl was king. I am glad I have mentioned vinyl for he is an almost fanatic supporter of the 33's and he will remind you that they are back!

In other areas of the library he was just as passionate about, like art and literature. I regularly get asked where is the ‘tall guy with the curly hair’ and that in itself is a tribute to Luke. We should continue with what he achieved here. Young librarians could learn a lot from him. I know I did!

Robert Moult, Librarian, Wynberg Public Library

We will never forget the many interesting and informative articles that Luke wrote for the Music Appreciation Column in the CL. As Robert says, he did indeed introduce our readers to unknown ‘worlds’. We thank you for that, Luke, and wish you well in your music endeavours. ED

Wagenmakersvallei ‘expands’

Wagenmakersvallei Mini Library was started on 18 March 2015 under a tree at the school in Wellington. They have since expanded their operations and are currently operating out of a classroom in the old school building.

The scene under the trees really looks idyllic. However we realise that it truly was not ideal and are all sharing in the joy of a ‘real’ library in a building. ED

Teddybear’s picnic draws users

Librarians have forever to come up with ideas of how to inspire children to read, and at Belhar Library the idea of a teddy-bear’s picnic seemed to hit the right note.
Bethesda Care Facility visited

On 8 September 2016 Gerty Potts, Petro Ruiters and Eurogine Carolus from George Library paid a visit to the Bethesda Care Facility where they donated books and magazines to the children and other residents. A story hour was also held for the children. The visit was greatly appreciated as is seen in the thank you letter below:

‘Yesterday is but a dream, Tomorrow is only a vision. But today well lived makes every yesterday a dream of happiness, and every tomorrow a vision of hope.

‘Thank you for being part of our vision to provide “Heart and Hope” to our patients. We greatly appreciate your support and contribution.’

IBBY Honour List 2016

Look out for our South African books:
Fanie Viljoen: Uit (LAPA Uitgewers, Pretoria).
Charmaine Kendal: Miscast (Junkets Publisher, Cape Town).
Kobus Geldenhuys (translator): Hoe om jou draak te tem (Protea Boekhuis, Stellenbosch).
Selloane Khosi (translator seSotho): Baile le Moketa (Jacana Media, Johannesburg).

The books having been presented and displayed at the IBBY congress in Auckland, now go on parallel travelling exhibitions in Russia, Japan, the USA, and at the Bologna Book Fair. They then will be placed in the International Youth Library in Munich.

Oral history celebrated in Beaufort West

Beaufort West has a unique history. It is a town of many firsts: it is the oldest South African municipality, the birthplace of world-renowned heart surgeon, Dr Chris Barnard, the first motel was started in 1852 — and so the list goes on.

It is against this backdrop that the Western Cape Department of Cultural Affairs and Sport (DCAS) rolled out the Oral History Initiative to the community of Beaufort West. The event, launched by Minister Anroux Marais, took place on Monday 15 August 2016 at the Kwa-Mandlenkosi Hall in Beaufort West. The project is a partnership between the Department and the Beaufort West Municipality.

The day was a celebration of sharing local history and celebrating sport, song and dance. Local singer Dan Lucas, traditional gumboot dancers from HM Dlikidla Primary School and the Khoisan Dancers from Restvale Primary School entertained the audience with their spectacular performances.

Local storyteller, author and playwright Wendy Anthonie interwove the local history with her personal experience and her passion for the Karoo. Local sport legend Valerie Goliath, highlighted the history and power of sport and her ongoing efforts in uplifting the local community through involvement in sport.

Minister Marais addressed the audience and encouraged them to keep history alive. ‘In a time where our world needs much healing, more social inclusion, rather celebrating our diversity than being opposed to it (a dividing factor), and sharing your stories is significantly relevant to making a positive change in our communities,’ she said.

DCAS is committed to preserving the stories of our local communities for future generations. Let us continue to celebrate our stories, BETTER TOGETHER.

On the sad passing away of Emeritus Professor Deon Kesting

It is with great sadness that the Library and Information Studies Centre at the University of Cape Town writes about the passing away of Emeritus Professor Deon Kesting on 17 August 2016. Professor Kesting held the first Chair of Librarianship at the University of Cape Town, of the then School of Librarianship, now known as the Library and Information Studies Centre (LISC). He served the School in this capacity from 1977 until his retirement at the end of 1991.

Under professor Kesting’s academic leadership, the school grew rapidly and by 1988, when it celebrated its 50th anniversary, a total of 849 students had obtained their first professional qualification in Library Studies (as it was known then) from the University of Cape Town. Emeritus Associate Professors Mary Nassimbeni and Karin de Jager, and Dr Gretchen Smith, all of whom who are still contributing to the School, were fortunate to have taught and researched under professor Kesting and owe much in the development of their academic and research careers to his leadership and mentorship. Emeritus Professor Peter Underwood succeeded professor Kesting in the Chair of Librarianship at the University of Cape Town and in the years to follow developed a warm and collegial relationship with the Kestings who remained in the Cape after his retirement. The current School is grateful to professor Underwood for maintaining, over the years, a link between the school and professor Kesting after his retirement. Professor Kesting supervised the studies of the first two PhDs awarded by the School (to Emeritus Associate Professor Mary Nassimbeni and professor Archie Dick). He was responsible for writing the standard reference source on libraries in South Africa which was published in 1980 by Kent and Lancour in the seminal Encyclopedia of Library and Information Science (New York: Dekker, 28:129-259).

The LIS School at the University of Cape Town, which recently celebrated 75 years of service in LIS education in Africa, will continue to build on the foundational work done by professor Kesting and his colleagues, to maintain the quality of LIS education and research that they strove for.
In celebration of National Book Week 2016, the Western Cape Library Service rolled out National Book Week to the West Coast communities of Vredenburg, Saldanha Bay and Hopefield during 6-8 September 2016. The event was launched by Minister Anroux Marais on 6 September 2016 at the Weskus Mall, Vredenburg. The project is a partnership between the Department of Cultural Affairs and Sport, the South African Book Development Council, the Department of Arts and Culture and the Saldanha Bay Municipality.

This year the campaign highlighted the importance of books and featured the themes #Buybook and #Readabook. The campaign encouraged the public to buy new books and donate it to those who do not have access to books at home.

School and a traditional dance performance by Diazville Primary School. Learners were enchanted by the appearance of the library mascot Bhuki and Funda Bala, the mascot for the National Book Week campaign. South African singer, songwriter and National Book Week ambassador, Chad Saaiman captivated the audience with his story on how reading helped him to achieve his dreams and survive in times of adversity.

In support of the #Buybook and #Readabook campaigns Minister Marais handed book donations to the learners of Diazville Primary and Masiphatisane Primary School. She emphasised the importance of reading and said: ‘Let us rediscover the joys of reading and the power held in the pages of the many books we can engage with.’

Schools that participated in the week’s programme include Louwville High School, Diazville High School, Diazville Primary School, Saldanha Primary School and Masiphatisane Primary School. Early Learning Centres that participated include: Hopefield Early Learning Centre, Weskusnessie Early Learning Centre and Dolfyntjies Early Learning Centre.

Programmes presented included activities with toy libraries, a wordathon card game, storytelling, craft sessions, film shows, face-painting, chess games and mobisite workshops for learners. Activities for adults included book competitions, an author talk and film shows for seniors.

- Na aanleiding van ‘n inisiatief van die destydse bibliotekaris, Frans van der Merwe (later direkteur van Biblioteekdienste in die Wes-Kaap) dat streekbibliotekarisse die geskiedenis van elke biblioteek in hulle streek moet navors, versoek Prof DL Ehlers in ‘n brief aan die redakteur dat hy graag terugvoer hieroor sal wil hê. (Ironics genoeg is ons tans besig met dieselfde inisiatief — sien ons reeks ‘Milestones’.)

- ‘n Plaaslike lid van Sedgefield Biblioteek doen ‘n waterverf-kunswerkie om geld in te samel vir ‘n boektrolley — R75 is so ingesamel.

- Die filmresensent Freddy Ogterop gee volledige riglyne en moedig biblioteke aan om filmverenigings in hul biblioteke te stig as teenoeter vir die doemprofete dat televisie ‘n groot invloed op die gebruik van films sal hê.

- As topikal then as today — even more so — the focus of the genre article in September was on tennis and teenagers and Ilse Ahrends introduced the topic: ‘…if the number of sports books published is anything to go by, sports lovers need not fear that inflation will stop them from reading about their heroes.’

- Also very relevant then and perhaps even more so today, Fun with food: the cook and books is the genre article for October and having listed three pages of cookbooks Edna Stern wittily ends with ‘If this is Greece it must be Turkey…” Amongst others she lists the doyen of cookery, Mrs Beeton’s cookery in colour as an invaluable source of information. (I managed to lay my hands on a copy of Mrs Beeton’s cookery and household management (Ward, Lock & Co Ltd, 1960) at the recent Mallemule Festival in Philadelphia — so exciting!)

- ‘Should public libraries be open on Sundays?’ was the controversy topic for months. Some comments:
  - Yes, they should be open as many members are tied down during the week
  - Nee, op platteland sal personeel weier om op Sondae te werk
  - Why not? It is the one day that most people feel a little bit bored
  - Let us rather open on a Saturday afternoon and make Sunday a day for reading. (One wonders what our readers’ and librarians’ views today would be on this matter?)

- Now a very famous and collectable artist, Peter Clarke opened an art exhibition in Grassy Park — a lovely cheese and wine function and the first of its kind was held in the library.
Cape Town City Libraries: 1952-1972

The effect of apartheid

The legislation that determined who the Cape Town City Libraries could serve, where they could serve them and what they could serve by Kathleen Laishley

Cape Town City Libraries (CTCL) was established in 1952 within the framework of the 1949 Provincial Library Ordinance. This ordinance made provision for a provincial subsidy of at least 50%, but it is significant that it also included a clause that separate facilities would have to be provided for Whites and non-Whites (Varley, 1950).

When CTCL started in 1952 there were libraries in areas that were racially segregated and libraries in areas with a mixed population. CTCL did not immediately introduce separate facilities in libraries in mixed areas. In 1959, the provincial administrator gave CTCL until 8 June 1962 to apply for separate facilities throughout the service even though apartheid already existed in most libraries (City of Cape Town, 1959).

The council commissioned a report on how CTCL was implementing separate facilities and a survey of all the libraries was done (City of Cape Town, 1960). The report included the following:

- new and separate libraries in non-white council housing areas and library depots in factories employing non-white labour
- two travelling libraries servicing non-whites in predominantly white areas
- the employment at predominantly white libraries were white professional staff only
- the employment and supervision at predominantly non-white libraries were non-white staff only
- at the head office professionally qualified non-Whites did not do professional work such as cataloguing, as this would involve working with white staff (City of Cape Town, 1961).

The survey showed that the majority of libraries (73.5%) were used by a single racial group. Only three libraries had high usage figures by different groups and of the three only Woodstock showed equal usage by Whites and Coloureds. (City of Cape Town, 1961).

The Provincial Administration used the 1959 survey to determine whether a library was White, Black or Coloured and instructed the council to apply the following criteria by 8 June 1962:

- in the 31 libraries where one race uses it predominantly, the library must be for their use only
- the race which is only a small percentage of the users is to be prohibited from using the branch provided that the existing mobile service is made available to them or new service points must be established for them
- in the case of Central, Wynberg and Woodstock libraries, separate libraries for ‘European and non-Europeans’ were to be established within three years (City of Cape Town, 1961).

The provincial administration used the withholding of their subsidy as a threat to force the council to implement separate facilities. In 1963 the provincial subsidy was approved but on condition that the council report fully on how they were going to apply apartheid in the libraries (Cape Times, 1963a).

In response to this pressure CTCL indicated that all new libraries would be designated for a particular race group from 1965 and planned segregated libraries for Wynberg and Woodstock and separate facilities for the Central Library (City of Cape Town, 1965).
Wynberg Library
To enforce the separate facilities clause in Wynberg the council established Castletown Library in 1967. A notice was displayed at Wynberg Library:

_The City Council has been obliged to provide separate library facilities for Whites and non-Whites, in order to comply with the requirements of Cape Provincial Library Ordinance No. 4 of 1955. In Wynberg a new library for non-white members has been built on the corner of Sussex and Bexhill Roads. As this library is now open, we greatly regret that we must request our non-white members to transfer their membership to it._ (Cape Argus, 1967).

Central Library
Central Library opened in temporary accommodation in 1955 until a site could be found in the city centre. In 1962 the council leased new premises for the library. Discussions before signing the lease took into account that the provincial administration would expect separate facilities to be applied. Councillor Gool said that ‘separate facilities were an insult not only to the Cape coloured people but to all non-white races’ (Cape Times, 1962).

The city librarian, Vermeulen, submitted a report on how separate facilities would be applied. There would be separate entrances on the ground floor but inside the building all races would have equal access to the shelves, and books would be issued from one desk. On the first floor tables would be set aside for ‘Europeans’ and ‘non-Europeans’ and shelves would be used to create boundaries for the reading rooms. (City of Cape Town, 1962).

Central Lending moved into the Sanlam Building on 28 July 1962. In 1963 the provincial administration informed the council that a separate library for Coloureds had to be established in the city centre (City of Cape Town, 1963b). In April 1964 the provincial administration threatened to withhold the subsidy if separate facilities were not provided in the city centre (City of Cape Town 1964a). The City Park Library opened in 1969 and ‘all non-white members of the Central Library were asked to transfer their membership to the new library’ (Cape Argus, 1969). The reference library in Wale Street remained open to all but with separate tables. Minutes from a meeting held before City Park opened, detail the segregation process:

- a notice board to be put up at Central Lending and leaflets to be handed out to inform borrowers of the new situation
- all non-white members to transfer to City Park
- non-white messengers to only be served at the desk and staff to select the books
- Coloureds and Blacks would be allowed to use the Information and Music Libraries but not the reference works in the Art Room (City of Cape Town, 1969).

Woodstock Library
The council struggled to find a site in Woodstock to build a segregated library (City of Cape Town, 1963c). The provincial administration wanted a temporary library built for Whites ‘which would provide an unobtrusive means for a voluntary and gradual separation of the races’ (Cape Argus, 1964). In 1966 the council was told to provide separate libraries in Woodstock or they would be responsible for the full cost of running it. Plans were made for a new library but a separate library for Whites was never built.

Langa Library
When the CTCL started in 1952 there was only one library in a black township. Langa Library was incorporated into CTCL in 1952. In 1958 responsibility for black libraries was placed with the then newly formed Bantu Education Department. This resulted in a loss of financial support for these libraries and services to Blacks (Mostert, 1999).

On 20 March 1960 Langa Library was burnt down during protests against the carrying of passes. The fact that Langa Library fell under the education department delayed the rebuilding of the library for ten years. There was disagreement about which department was responsible for the finances and

Petty apartheid amongst staff

Until 1963 the staff of the extension libraries, who were all Coloured, worked at head office in the mornings and then went to their own libraries in the afternoons. They had to process books, file cards, write overdue notices, and shelve books at white libraries (Jansen, 2013). ‘The hours of extension libraries were dictated by the need for people to work on the [processing] belt’ (Naiker, 2013). White staff at branches did not have to do this. ‘So-called coloured workers had to do all the dirty work at head office before going out to the branches’ (Jansen, 2013).

This practice of coloured staff working at Head Office in the morning and then going to their own libraries was only stopped in 1963. After an investigation into staffing, permanent staff was appointed in the processing department and extension staff only worked in their own libraries (City of Cape Town, 1964a).

At Head Office the type of work to be done by staff was determined by which racial group they belonged to.

The other positions such as cataloguing and requests were primarily allocated to Whites regardless of their qualifications — that was where the segregation came in. There were no Whites in processing (Naiker, 2013).

Even if staff in the service were not openly racist, the non-white staff members were still subjected to petty apartheid which was demeaning.

Inherent racism was shown by the attitude of white staff in areas of work such as book selection. Whites thought they knew what Coloureds should read and would decide that certain books were not needed in coloured libraries.

Conclusion

On the one hand CTCL was more open-minded than other services in the country, but segregation existed from the start. In comparison to CTCL the Cape Provincial Library Service (CPLS) implemented library apartheid early. Parow was the first municipality to a build a library for Coloureds at the cost of £4,000 (Kruger, 1972). The Cape Librarian noted that the new CPLS Head Office ‘is designed for apartheid with separate entrances for Europeans and non-Europeans’ (Cape Provincial Library Service, 1959). Separate facilities were applied at CTCL later than at CPLS and SAPL (Torch, 1963a).

Although CTCL brought library services to more people in 20 years, it did so within a segregated service system.

This is an edited version of the article City of Cape Town’s segregated history: 1952 — 1972 by Kathleen Laishley and Sandy Zinn, published in Innovation: journal of appropriate librarianship and information work in Southern Africa No 50, June 2015 pp3 - 19. Copies of the full article and a full list of references for the study can be obtained at http://etd.uwc.ac.za/xmlui/bitstream/handle/11394/4063/Laishley_MLIS_2014.pdf?sequence=1

The situation today

The strategic objectives of the Western Cape Library Service today are to provide library and information services which are free, equitable and accessible to all. Public libraries are actively promoted as social hubs that foster social cohesion amongst people from all cultural backgrounds.

South Africa’s painful past as outlined in the article above makes one appreciate the positive changes that took place over the last few decades in public libraries. The Western Cape Library Service (WCLS) now serves all inhabitants in the province through its 367 library service points, adhering to the vision of the Western Cape’s Department of Cultural Affairs and Sport: to create a socially inclusive, creative, active and connected Western Cape.

Wynberg Library was used by all race groups
In March this year I was given an amazing opportunity to represent the Western Cape Library Service at the second India Public Libraries Conference (IPLC 2016) held in New Delhi, India. The Western Cape Library Service was invited to share our best practices to assist Indian public libraries to enhance their systems. The trip was fully sponsored by the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, complete with first class return tickets and overnight stays at the Hyatt Regency Hotel in New Delhi. It was a wonderful experience and lots of interesting information was shared. We were a group of speakers from around the world and I was honoured to share the stage with Deborah Jacobs, director for Global Libraries of the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation and Jennifer Nicholson, immediate past secretary general of the International Federation of Library and Information Associations (IFLA).

About the conference
Indian public libraries are a legacy of the British era. The concept of public libraries has changed drastically in the 21st century with the emphasis on making them community orientated and accessible to all, irrespective of gender, age, caste, class, religion, disability, et cetera. Transformation in the Indian public libraries is imminent with the assistance of the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation. Through their assistance and generosity we were able to contribute to making the IPLC 2016 a great success.

Objectives
The IPLC 2016 sought to reposition public libraries as the original knowledge and information centres equipped with digital technologies to cater for the needs of 21st century users. The conference also envisioned the role of public libraries in addressing emerging needs of communities through the use of relevant technologies and innovative content and services.

Sharing innovations and best practices in the sphere of public library content and services and understanding the challenges in achieving the above-mentioned objectives were also part of the brief.

The conference also saw the launch of the Indian Public Libraries Movement (IPLM), an organisation set up to inspire public libraries in India to greater heights and achievements.

Theme
The theme of the conference Inspiring and repositioning public libraries — technology, content and services was divided into sub-themes:
- best practices in public libraries: global trends
- infrastructure in public libraries in India
- digital content for public libraries
- innovative library services for public
- international collaboration: improving the public library system in India
- public private partnership (PPP) models for public libraries
- international collaborations/capacity building.

There was also a panel discussion on inspiring and repositioning public libraries: technology, content and services and several recommendations were made.

Municipal Support Service: Western Cape
The Western Cape Library Service was invited to speak on ‘Best practices in public libraries: Global trends’. Our presentation was based on the Western Cape Government’s vision to be the best run regional government, by highlighting the Library Service’s Municipal Support Services Section (MSS) that deals with funding to all twenty-five municipalities in the Western Cape, managing three-hundred-and-sixty-seven public libraries.

The Municipal Support Services was established as a new sub-directorate of the Western Cape Government Library Service in 2013 and is responsible for the management of three grants aimed at supporting library services at municipal level: the Conditional Grant, Municipal Replacement Funding and the Metro Library Grant. The bulk of these grants is transferred to municipalities. All the funding received are public funds and therefore need to be utilised responsibly. The MSS team therefore conducts monitoring visits to all 25 municipalities, three times a year.

In addition to these monitoring visits, the MSS team also conducts special visits to municipalities that experience difficulties or where new library managers have been appointed. An annual seminar for all library managers and finance staff is held in September of each year as well as an annual training/workshop in February/March each year.

New library building projects and upgrades to existing libraries are also funded through the Conditional Grant. The MSS Public Library Enhancement team attends regular building site meetings, ensuring that the projects are completed on time and the funds utilised.

Leadership workshop
On the last day of the conference we attended a vibrant, interactive and fun workshop on innovative leadership. This workshop was presented by Susan Schnuer, associate director at the Mortenson Centre for International Library Programmes. Susan has been working for the Mortenson Centre for the past 25 years. Her work includes a complete leadership programme which she presents to people all around the world including to the members of LIASA.

In her workshop Susan encouraged us to become leaders with innovative ideas. In the practical part of the workshop our abilities as innovative leaders were challenged. The first task was to design a dirt bin for one’s library that would encourage people not to litter and the other task was to use balloons and scotch tape to build a free-standing tower. It was lots of fun working with teams from Singapore and Malaysia.

Visit to the Delhi Public Library
An overseas trip would not be complete without a visit to a public library and we were fortunate to visit the Delhi Public Library who offers the same services as our libraries back home do. Some of these include:
- free membership and lending of books for home reading
- free public Internet access
- lending of DVDs/CDs
- an exclusive children’s section with Internet terminals and games
- reference and reprographic services
- outreach activities such as storytelling, film shows, etcetera
- a reading room.

Meeting and intermingling with like-minded people from other cultures was an exhilarating experience and my thanks go to the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation for making this possible.

American author Paul Beatty wins the 2016 Man Booker Prize for The Sellout, a satire of US racial politics, making him the first American writer to win the award.
Twee feeste in Julie

Boekbesoeke aan Montagu en Bloemfontein deur Francois Verster

In Julie 2016 het ek twee feeste, die Breyten Breytenbach Boekefees in Montagu (8-10 Julie) en die Vrystaatfees in Bloemfontein (11-16 Julie), bygewoon. Montagu se fees word, soos etlike ander in Suid-Afrika, deur prof Darryl David georganiseer. Ek was ‘n paar jaar gelede by sy Boekbedennerfees op Richmond — tóe ook in Kaapse Bibliotekaris beskryf — om te luister, na boeke te kyk, en ‘n paar boeke te gaan verkwaal. En met dieselfde gevoel van afwagting is ek vanjaar na Montagu.

Met ‘n boks vol van my eie boeke in my motor se kattebak het ek die Sondagoggend tienuur die dorp binnegery, op soek na die plek waar die boekfees gehou word. Die restaurante was toe en die enigste mense in die dorp wat ek buite kon sien was kerkgangers, maar een van hulle kon my die pad bedui. Daar was geen baniere wat Breyten Breytenbach Boekefees uitbasuin nie, net een wat iets oor ‘n kunsuitstalling genoem het.

Toe ek gaan vra waar die boeke is, sê hulle my ‘O dis hier, gaan net daar deur daardie gang verby die stalletjie daarso …’ en ek sien toe Protea Uitgewers het ‘n tafel en uitstalrakke by die ingang na die leesinglokaal. By navraag blyk dit dat Protea ‘n nuwe winkel in Worcester geopen het en dat dit ‘n boek van daardie tak was wat daar uitgestal is. Daar was musiek en mense het in feestelike luim rondgestaan en wyn gedrink. Die son was uit, en al was die luggie koel, was dit lekker man, baie lekker, om daar te wees — boekmense is rustige mense, smaak dit my, en bereid om te deel in leeservarings en aanbevelings oor boeke.

Ek het prof Darryl David se lewing Going to church — church tourism in SA oor sy kerkboeke eerste bygewoon. Hy het vertel hoe die boeke tot stand gekom het en hoe hy tussendeur boekfeeste reël, soos een fees wat hy self nie kon bywoon nie omdat hy eenvoudig nie genoeg geld gehad het vir reis en verblyf nie, maar positiewe mens wat hy is, het hy ons foto’s gewys wat hy geneem het, toweragtige sneeulandskappe, wat hy nie sou kon neem indien hy wel na die genoemde fees sou kon gaan nie. Dis Darryl daai: hy sien altyd die silwer randjie raak.

Ek het nog twee lesings bygewoon: een deur Helena Gunter oor haar diepsinnige kortverhaalbundel Met koffer en kaart joppie nie. En iemand soos Eben moet gedurig rondreis — skeidsregters as wat hulle wil wees. Nogal nie so 'n eenvoudige Eben, 'n vuisgeveg moes keer. Fasiliteerders is soms meer soos een skrywer 'n ander “Jou f...en idioot” genoem het en hoe hy, interessante mense — Eben vertel van 'n geleentheid toe ons anekdotes uitgeruil. Die bedryf het darem die skrywers en boeke. Rudie van Rensburg arriveer ook later fasiliteerders, by my kom sit en — natuurlik — gesels oor.”

My volgende boek-ervaaring, of eerder fees-ervaaring, was drie dae later in Bloemfontein. Ek het, ‘n swaar griep ten spyt, halfvier die oggend van 13 Julie afgesit na die lug-hawe. Op Bloemfontein gekom is ek dadelik na die Kovsie-kampus, waar ek nader aan een van daai blind metaalverwarmers met die lang nekke wat soos lorries se uitlaatpype lyk, geskuif. Dit was beenbryndend koud in Bloemfontein.

Ek het die tyd benut om aan Dan Sleigh se pragboek 1795 te lees en ook ‘n ogie te hou op die publiek — watter boeke koop hulle van die magdom wat keurig in die groot ruimte van die Eefuessaal uitgestal is? Daar was baie van Dana Snyman se boeke, ook van Johan Bakkes, Rudie van Rensburg, Karin Brynard, Ingrid Winterbach, Francois Bloemhof, ook ouer werke deur Sol Plaatjies, Arthur Fula en so meer. Etlikes was bekend, slegs enkele minder so; ‘n verteenoordigende vertoonvenster vir die huidige Afrikaanse boeke-eskpsrum. So asof iemand ‘n hand kaarte uitgesprei het en sê: “Dis wat ons op die tafel kan sit. Hierby staan of val ons. Bewonder en geniet.”

En toe is ek terug hotel toe, so teen drie-uur die middag, waar ek verder aan 1795 gelees het, my medisyne gedrink het, kos en sokkies gaan soek het (ek kon nie al drie dae bybring nie, juis weens ander boekverpligtinge), was geweldig bevredigend. Of die uitgawes die onkostes regverdig kan oor gekibbel word, maar ek glo dat dit oor meer gaan as net verkope — dit vorm deel van ‘n kultuur van bewussyn, van deelname … in die eie, van kontakt tussen leser en skrywer en wisselwerking van verskillende fases in die kreatiewe proses.
Boekkoors by Boekejol

’n Boeke-ervaring hoogtepunt deur Francois Verster

Op 19 Augustus land ek in Gauteng, effe (ver)dwalend in die onbekende omgewing. Ek sal die volgende dag ‘n ontbyt met skrywers, lesers en resensente bywoon, en later daardie dag aan ‘n paneelbespreking oor die Bosoorlog deelneem. Maar dis eers die volgende dag — wat sal ek intussen doen? Die hotel waar die uitgewers my akkommodasie bespreek het, is reg oorkant ‘n aantal eetplekke, sodat die hele swerm geboue daar ‘n soort onthaalkompleks vorm.

Ek besluit om te gaan kyk presies waar Boekejol 2016 plaasvind; Dia van Staden en haar span se tweede aanbieding van film- en boekegeleenthede in Lynnwood Bridge naby Pretoria.

Daar is heelwat mense in die restaurante en ek kry die goudvis-in-die-bak-gevoel terwyl ek so tussen almal deursuiker na die Atterburytheater, die kern van die koekie wat die fees uitmaak. Ek moet soontoe om na die program te kyk en te sien of ek nog tussen my eie verpligtinge ‘n item kan bywoon.

Ek kies Koors in kleur. Ek het genoeg tyd — dis eers agtuur die aand — en R150 sal my nie bankrot maak nie. Langs Computicket is ‘n boekuitstalling en Koors is groot: stapels eksemplare lê oral, in allerhande vorms en structure asof dit deur ‘n hengse literêre olifant uitgepoef is. Operation Jumbo Drop. Jô, dink ek, daar’s so baie, die uitgewers is duidelik vol vertroue! Hulle gaan almal verkoop kry!
Ek het die boek reeds gelees, want ek hou van toekomsboeke soos Stephen King se The stand en het self al my hand aan so iets gewaag — daarom het ek juus met ‘n eie agenda gelees, om te sien wat dié man met die konsep van ‘n post-apokaliptiese krisis kan doen — en die boek geniet, al 579 bladsye daarvan, maar veral die kommentaar op geskiedenis, politiek, filosofie, en ja, die ‘menslike kondisie’.

En so sit ek toe in die halfskemer van die teater met die kollig op Lize Beekman (die skerp lig verguld haar blonde hare en aksentueer haar mooi beenstuktuur treffend) wat onder begeleiding van Jacolln Mouton ‘n paar goue oues sing. En skielik skuif die lig na twee figure regs van hulle: oud-joernalis Elna van der Merwe en die meesterskrywer, gemaklik wagtend op ‘n rusbank. Deel Twee van die vertoning begin met Deon Meyer wat geps die openingstoneel van Koors voorlees.

… soos die Romein Cicero gesê het: Silent enim leges inter arma — tydens oorlog is wette stil. En soos Meyer dit belig: die mens is ‘n dier en ‘beskawing’ is ‘n dun lagie vernis

Die gesprek was pittig en insiggewend, Meyer se intellektuele en verbale soepelheid het nogmaals sterk op die voorgrond getree, so tussendeur die musikale aanbiedings van die Beekman- en Moutonspan. Weldra was die gehoor gemotiveerd om die stapels eksemplare van Koors in die voorportaal te gaan opraap.

Toe die ligte aankom, kyk ek rond, maar … geen teken van die geheimsinnige fluisteraar nie. Miskien was dit net my verbeelding. Of was Bennie dalk daar, tog maar bekommerd hy word klandestien vervang?

Die einde van Koors is deur 'n resensent as 'onverkwiklik' beskryf. Regtig? Vir my het dit na 'n slim manier gelyk om 'n opvolg moontlik te maak. As Meyer, sy uitgewers en Bennie daaroor konsensus kan bereik. En temas soos die etiese aspekte van die resensiekuns, die probleme wat 'n klein plaaslike literêre milieu meebreng waar almal later almal ken, die dun ys waarop resensente wat ook boeke skryf loop — al die ou kwessies — is bespreek en die kollig het weereens skerp in die retinas van die meningsvormers gebrand. Hieroor is al veel gesê, en die woorde van een van die sprekers: hoe belangrik is die mening van 'n resensent regtig?, laat ek die sluier daaroor sak. Die vreë was relevant, maar die antwoorde relatief. Relatief op baie vlakke, terwyl verkoopstelsers steeds kwalif voorspel kan word. Soos een van die resensente terug geëinsineer het.

Deon Meyer, ook al met twee gloeiende resensies van Koors agter die blad, hoef hom kwalif te komkomsers oor moontlike verlies van lesers. Die stem van die skrywer bly in die koppe van die lesers resoneer, die resep is steeds goed, die bemarking ook. Die koors pak die gereelde Meyer-aanhangers en dalk 'n klompie nuwes, mense wat nie noodwendig krimmie-groupies is nie. Die epidemie word dalk selfs 'n pandemie. Al sy boeke gaan immers nou oorsee en die Meyer-virus muteer steeds om lesers in talle tale te trakteer.

In die vliegtuig op pad huistoe lees ek aan Koos Stadler se Recce en dink aan die ‘spesmagte’ in Koors, die beskrywings van militêre opleiding in Meyer se boek en ek besef opnuut dat die mensdom altyd bedreig sal word, indien nie deur sy omgewing nie, dan deur homself. En dan verkies ons tog recces om ons te beskerm bo selfs die beste speurders. Want soos die Romein Cicero gesê het: Silent enim leges inter arma — tydens oorlog is wette stil. En soos Meyer dit belig: die mens is 'n dier en ‘beskawing’ is 'n dun lagie vernis. Hoekom noem ek dit? Want al die werklik goeie boeke laat 'n residu agter wat deursypel na jou onderbewussyn en deel van jou lewensbeskouing word.

Die volgende oggend het ek die gesprek oor resensies bygewoon, basies 'n paar resensente op kroegstoele voor 'n paar tafels vol skrywers en lesers. En temas soos die etiese aspekte van die resensiekuns, die probleme wat 'n Klein plaaslike literêre milieu meebreng waar almal later almal ken, die dun ys waarop resensente wat ook boeke skryf loop — al die ou kwessies — is bespreek en die kollig het weereens skerp in die retinas van die meningsvormers gebrand. Minstens een frase wat jou bybly, iets wat jy oor die lewe en oor jouself geleer het.

In retrospek was Boekejol 2016 sover 'n hoogtepunt van my boeke-ervarings vir die jaar — die Woordfees, die Breytenbachfees op Montagu, die Vrystaatfees, Phildelphia se Mallemeulefees … maar ek hoop altyd op meer. En daar is nog feeste op die horison. Nog veel om te geniet en te leer. Laat ons lees, laat ons leer, laat ons lewe!

Although annual Library Week is one of the biggest events of the year in the library world, we have had very little feedback on this year’s activities. However, the theme #Libraries4lifelonglearning seemed to resonate with Readers Library who cleverly based their programme on the theme. Of course, that does not imply that other libraries didn’t do the same – we just don’t know about it. One thing that is clear is that so often libraries present wonderful and exciting programmes and set up amazing displays and then — alas, they forget to report on these. We nevertheless share some of the interesting and exciting activities that were held during the week that have been shared with us and thank librarians for the effort and ingenuity with which this project is tackled every year.

Conville Biblioteek het pret tydens Biblioteekweek

Groot pret was die wagwoord tydens ’n week propvol aksie by Conville Biblioteek. ’n Interessante woordboukompetisie het groot aftrek gekry. Talie interessante aktiviteite is aangebied, soos pruim-in-die-lepel, en haal-appels-uit-die-meel-uit-kompetisies en die jongspan het groot pret gehad toe hulle gesiggies geverf is.

Boetevryweek by Graafwater Biblioteek

Daar is omtrent gewoel in Graafwater. ’n ‘Boetevryweek’ is aangekondig en pogings aangewend om onaktiewe lede hieroor in te lig. Dié wat voorheen getrou gelees het, is aangemoedig om weer te kom aansluit. Biblioteekmateriaal is tydens die week uitgedeel.

Die tyd is ook gebruik om paasuitreiking vir die kinders van Graafwater Primêre Skool Graad R klas te doen om sodoende die paasgedagte aan onderwysers te versprei. Ledewerwing is onder ander skoliere gedoen.

Lambertsbaai NSRI – Sea Rescue het aan leerders ’n praktiese opleidingsessie gebied wat baie geniet is.

Getroue lesers van Graafwater Biblioteek het leessertifikate ontvang en ’n motiveringspraatjie is gehou om leerders aan te moedig om te lees.

Twitter ruled the roost at Readers Library: #getready4life

#letyourimaginationrule was part of a storytelling project where the front and back cover of the book was blanked out — the children had to draw their own cover. Seen here is Tanya Wiese, library assistant, reading a story to the children.

#getcomputersavvy was aimed at teaching young and old on computers. Here Thandile Styodana, library assistant, is shown giving assistance at the computers.

#never2old was aimed at the elderly who are shown here how to cover and repair a book by Sylvia Ndlebe.

#ready2learn: Y-Zané Francke, library assistant, gave a book education talk to the toddlers of Active Day Kids.

The displays catered for adults with the theme #Libraries4lifelonglearning and for children with the theme #Play and Learn.

LARSON, Erik
Dead wake: the last crossing of the Lusitania.
- Black Swan, 2015.
Larson reconstructs the last and fatal voyage of what was widely considered the most beautiful ship of the day, the giant four-stacker Lusitania. Readers are treated to a fascinating account of events relating to the tragic event of the 1915 sinking by a German U-boat of the luxury ocean liner bound from New York to Liverpool. The book is well-researched and reveals details that make this event even more unfortunate. Larson follows the narrative of several of the passengers aboard the big boat. This brings the disaster away from technical details to actual human experience. You will get to know some of the passengers, and learn their fates. There is a wealth of information in Dead wake. For example, the biggest surprise and perhaps the most controversial element in the book is the suggestion that Britain did not exactly do all it could to protect the Lusitania from enemy attack, as there were some at the highest levels of government who believed that such an event might hasten the enlistment of the USA into the war. Larson succeeds in instilling tension into the eventual meeting of the Lusitania with her killer. This book is at its best when describing the lethal new technology of early submarine warfare. Larson's vivid description of life aboard the U-boat is compelling, while information about the physical realities of the Lusitania is fascinating. The author's approach to history resembles a novelist's and is filled with questions worth asking. EB

SPARKS, Allister
The sword and the pen: six decades on the political frontier.
Allister Sparks has added yet another significant literary contribution to his already well-published and respected books on South Africa's transition from apartheid to democracy. Essentially, The sword and the pen is a biography of this veteran journalist and highly acclaimed, sometimes controversial, political commentator. As editor of the Rand Daily Mail from 1967 and specifically during the 1970s, he was well exposed to the inner echelons of the apartheid government of the time and bravely published reports of the rather murky and less than honourable behaviour of that government and its leaders. These memoirs of Allister trace back to his upbringing in the Eastern Cape, oblivious to the history and the misfortunes of the Xhosa people around him and their migration to and absorption into the white colonial economy and subjection to exploitation and racial segregation. This is, as he describes it, “his Bildungsroman” — his coming-of-age story and his psychological and moral growth from youth to adulthood, his transformation and political awakening from a naive young reporter at the age of seventeen to a seasoned, senior doyen of his profession and leading protagonist of a non-racial democratic South Africa over a period of 66 years. I believe Sparks has provided us with a remarkably beautifully written, insightful, factual political and personal historical record of his life and times during South Africa’s recent turbulent years of the Struggle, through to the emergence of our new society and with a vision for the future we all so desperately seek.’(www.capemessenger.co.za, Dave Gant)

BREYTENBACH, Dibi
Vrediger.
- Lapa, 2016.
‘Dibi Breytenbach volg haar debuut, Saliger, op met Vrediger — ‘n sielkundige riller in vele opsigte. Die sentrale figuur van haar verhaal — Willem Maarschalk — is nie ‘n polisieman of voormalige soldaat nie, maar ‘n prokureur. Maar dis nie ‘n LA Law-tipe storie dié nie. Reeds op die eerste bladsy bevind Maarschalk hom op ‘n gruwelike moordtoneel. Sy belangrikste klíënt, die skatryk suikerrietboer Johannes Kleinveldt, se huiswerker word raaiselagtig op sy plaas vermoor. Kleinveldt soek sy prokureur by hom. Benewens sy persoonlike verlies is die dood van ‘n plaaswerker altyd verdag en wys die vinger altyd na die boer toe. Die feit dat Kleinveldt se buurman, Dingane Ngwenya, boopon ‘n grondefis op sy plaas indien, maak dinge nie makliker nie. Ngwenya het belangrike politici as vriende en Kleinveldt se plaas is erfgrond. Kleinveldt se plaaswerkers word deur plaaslike mense van die moord beskuldig en dié werkers word dan wreed aangeval. Maarschalk het gehoop op ‘n nuwe, rustige begin op die platteland na sy egskieding, maar dié moord en die gebeure wat daarop volg, lei tot ‘n komplekse situasie waar politiek veral...
Die botoor voer. En dit is wat Vrediger ‘n unieke leeservaring maak. Waar die meeste spanningsverhale min of meer dieselfde patroon het, gee Breitenbach die leser ‘n blik op die werking van die Suid-Afrikaanse regstelstel, korruptie by die polisie en hoe ‘n politieke draad deur alles loop. Hierby maak die feit dat Breitenbach self ‘n ervare regsgeleerde is, die gebeure soveel meer geloofwaardig. Die wreedheid van die mens kom ook onder die loep en Breitenbach vra vele filosofiese vrae by monde van Maarschalk. Vrediger is ‘n fassinerende blik op Suid-Afrika se strafregstel en is boonop ‘n boeiende raaisel wat knap en ekonomies geskryf is.” (Die Burger, Riaan Grobler)

GROENEWALD, Anneli

Die skaalmodel.- Tafelberg, 2016.

‘Anneli Groenewald se debuutroman, Die skaalmodel, is reeds met die Groot Romankompetisie se debuutprys bekroon en word deur ‘n onkategoriseerbare valseheid gekenmerk. Hier en daar klink die sprankelende prosa ‘n bietjie na Marlene van Niekerk, soms herinner die vertelling aan Etienne van Heerden, maar uiteindelik is dit ‘n heetemal vars, eie stem wat ‘n mens hier hoor. Die hele roman is een deurlopende monoloog: Juffrou Berdina Visagie se verdediging en waarom sy die unieke leeservaring bied. Juffrou Visagie kry die destydse Krygkor plek te missieltoetstoring van die 1980’s onteien is om vir ‘n blik in die pastel van die strafregstel. Die praktiese, visuele munte van die 1980’s is een van die produktes van die Groot Romankompetisie se debuutprys bekroon.

The house on Cold Hill.- Macmillan, 2015.

The House on Cold Hill seer een koppel, Ollie en Cara Harcourt, en hul twaalfjarige kind, Jade, aan om 'n rommel in die Romeynse deel van die nuwe landbou. Ollie en Cara meenden dat dit 'n goeie lokasie was om te lewe en te werk. Maar hulle het ondanks al die planne wat maak, die pas toe aan die vmeye van die ou eeu. The house on Cold Hill is 'n unieke boek wat die leser deur 'n tijdreis laat voer, van die forse vroeë 1900's tot die moderne tydperk. Die boek se hoofpersoon, Ollie, is 'n sollicitor wat in Brighton werk en die familie leef. Die heidere van die boek, die ou, gevaarlik huis, is 'n plaas waar die familie moet leer om te bestaan in die moderne tydperk. Die boek is 'n unieke verkenning van die ou en nuwe tydperk en die leesers sal geniet van die spannerige verhaal en die diepgaande onderwerpe wat erger.

TRIGIANI, Adriana
All the stars in the heavens. - Simon & Schuster, 2016.
Trigiani re-creates the golden age of Hollywood in this fictionalisation of Hollywood actress Loretta Young's life. Much of the story is seen through the eyes of Alda, a former nun who comes to work as Young's personal secretary, seeing to her needs and keeping her confidences. Trigiani paints a rich, historical landscape of 1930s Los Angeles. The movie business is booming in 1935 when twenty-one-year-old Loretta Young meets thirty-four-year-old Clark Gable on the set of The call of the wild. Though he's already married, Gable falls for the beautiful and vivacious young actress. The affair had long-lasting consequences, and although Gable promised that he was going to divorce his wife to be with Loretta, he strung her along. She had a career to worry about, and a home wrecker would not look good in the tabloids or on her résumé. Young would go through extraordinary measures to hide the subsequent pregnancy at a time when adultery and a child out of wedlock destroyed careers. This novel begins as a love story, and evolves into a life story. The focus is on Young, but the supporting characters and background information are just as interesting. This will appeal to lovers of the old Hollywood movies and may attract new Trigiani fans. EB

MARNEY, Ellie
‘Picking up on the current Sherlock Holmes Zeitgeist, Every breath is the story of two teenagers playing at detective, trying to solve the death of their friend Homeless Dave. Rather than Holmes and Watson we get Mycroft and Watts, best friends drawn to each other because they have both lost everything — Mycroft his parents and Watts her family home in the country. As they are pulled deeper into the mysteries surrounding Dave’s murder, they also discover a growing attraction to each other, so like all good stories about death it’s about love too. Mycroft and Watts are fast-talking, flawed, bright characters. The requisite banter is threaded through with the language of crime procedurals — lividity and rigor mortis and blood spatter patterns — which is charming in its novelty. Ellie Marney’s YA novel explores the isolation and the desperation to escape later teenage years, and is moodyly underscored by a cold and gloomy Melbourne. The writing is pacy and engaging but doesn’t shy away from darkness. Reminiscent of Lili Wilkinson’s A pocketful of eyes, although slightly grimmer in tone, Every breath will be enjoyed by readers aged 13 and up. It is the first book of a trilogy.’

JENKINS, Steve
Down down down: a journey to the bottom of the sea.
‘Gr 3-6. Starting at the surface of the Pacific Ocean, Jenkins introduces some of the animals that inhabit descending layers of water all the way down to the Marianas trench. At nearly 36,000 feet, this zone has been visited only once by human passengers of a research vessel. Depicted in Jenkins’s signature handsome collages, the denizens of each level swim against ever-darkening backgrounds ranging from sunny blue to deepest black. Each double-page segment begins with a paragraph or two explaining the growing degree of darkness, cold, and pressure, and how all of these affect the lives of the resident creatures. A bar running down the far right of each scene indicates depth. Usually three or four animals — whales, fish, worms, and more — are featured. Sometimes colourful or luminescent and often toothy, they are both familiar and strange. In some views, the animals are relative in size, but in others, those that are actually quite different in scale appear to be similar. At the end of the book an added paragraph about each scene takes up the matter of size. Here the length is stated, and silhouettes compare each creature to either an adult human’s hand or a full body. The bold views tend to emphasise the weirdness of these little-known species, but the repeated message that humans have much to explore and learn in the deeper ocean is intriguing and inviting.’ (School Library Journal, M Bush)

BULBRING, Edyth
Snitch.- Tafelberg, 2016.
‘Snitch is a youth novel of note. Ben and his two friends, Tsietsi and William, are just regular kids at school: Ben plays rugby and does well at school. He has a sister and mother, his father died, and his mother is the person he can confide in; she never blabs. But when he tells her that Adrian’s unexpected heart attack might be caused by steroids, she breaks their code of not telling by talking to a nurse and the story gets back to the school. This makes Ben an outcast; the boy everybody loves to hate. Ben is now the rat, the weasel, the sneak. “No longer Ben-OK. I was Snitch.” This is the beginning of a very rough period at school. He is treated with disrespect, abused and eventually his two friends are also targeted and this results in him losing his two best friends. Will Ben survive this ordeal; is this the test of his personal strength? His dad left a letter for him with the following comment: “My hope for you is that you will have decided to stand outside the boxes that trap the ones who race with the pack.” A brilliantly written and utterly believable story of a boy and his experiences as a teenager in a school environment, but also with his family, Uncle Charlie, the dog Terror, and the girl Elizabeth who he worships, mostly from afar. The writing is exceptionally good; written in the first person, Ben is the narrator, and the author does not waste a single word in telling a story which moves at a fast pace and keeps you involved. Bulbring is a writer of substance and noteworthy. I am sure the book will be well received and well read.’ (lonareviews.blogspot.co.za, Lona Gericke)

THORNE, Jack, TIFFANY, John and ROWLING, JK
Harry Potter and the cursed child: parts one and two.- Little,Brown, 2016.
This new Harry Potter book, the 8th, is a play, not a novel and, surprisingly, it reads very easily. It’s the script for the two-part West End stage play written by Jack Thorne and based on an original new story by Thorne, JK Rowling and John Tiffany. The story is set 19 years after the last book, Harry Potter and the deathly hallows. Harry is in his late 30s and he and Ginny have three children. Hermione, married to Ron (who runs his brothers’ joke shop), is Minister of Magic while Harry is Head of Magical Law Enforcement at the Ministry. The book begins when Harry’s youngest son, Albus, starts school at Hogwarts and much of the story is concerned with their fraught relationship. Although I was sceptical at first, I found this easy to get into and really enjoyed it. Carol Memmott wrote, ‘It’s beautifully written and achieves Shakespearean levels of drama as it delves into the past’s hold on the present, the power of familial love, the importance of friendship and the healing power of forgiveness.’ (Chicago Tribune). The book is already an international bestseller and one can see why. While it doesn’t satisfy fans’ hunger for a ‘proper’ Harry Potter novel, it is, nevertheless, a rewarding read. Being a play, this should be classed as non-fiction, but we have decided to shelve it with the Harry Potter novels.Recommended. SCG

NOTE: At the time of going to press some titles were still on order

The only thing that you absolutely have to know is the location of the library.

Albert Einstein
The special purpose and function of any special or reference library is to provide users with information they need, in a usable form, at the time when they need it (the age-old adage of ‘the right book for the right person at the right time’).

The aim must therefore be to anticipate these needs as far as possible by ensuring that material for which there might be a demand is already on the library’s shelves. This presupposes that librarians are aware of and understand their users’ needs, and build their reference collection accordingly.

However, even the largest reference library cannot afford to hold more than a small proportion of the documents that are likely to be needed by users. The reasons may be either because of limitations of space, the level of users’ interest or financial and budgetary considerations.

To overcome financial constraints with regard to the reference collection policy of the Western Cape Library Service it thus became practical to provide a single copy only for the SN library of material which is either too expensive to buy multiple copies of, or of subjects not generally in demand although deemed necessary to have some coverage on those subjects. A selected list of some of these books (affectionately called ISN copies) follows:

338.19 HES  Fair food: growing a healthy, sustainable food system for all.- PublicAffairs, 2011.
Q 730.96 JUL  Oju Ona.- PlanArt Studio, c2012.
Q 745.5922103 COL  Coleman, Dorothy S. The collector's encyclopedia of dolls. 2 Vols.- Hale, 1970.
Background

On 5 May 1965 the administrator of the Cape, Hon Mr JN Malan opened a new library depot at Head Office in Hospital Street in Cape Town. This library serves all government employees in the Library Service as well as those in the Roads Department and Hospital Stores. The library contained approximately 7,000 books and would eventually also stock vinyl records and art prints. There was also a juvenile section where officials could borrow books for their families. It was open during lunch hour Mondays to Fridays and the librarian was Miss Cecily Taylor.

The depot was intended to be a ‘model library’, setting an example for future libraries. Thus it was beautifully furnished with African walnut shelves, cabinets and catalogues. It had a reference collection and, therefore, it was hoped that officials would use this library for official purposes, as well as for recreation, so that staff requests would be handled by the depot, and not Central Reference.

Pendy Joerning, remembers ... (1972-2011)

Pendy Joerning, library assistant, Tygerberg Regional Library, took over Hospital Street Depot in May 1972 from Anna-Marie Rabie, senior library assistant, when she was on maternity leave.

‘I fancied running a library, (although I had no qualifications) and asked Mrs Kleinschmidt (my supervisor at the time) if I could take it over. Much to my amazement she and the powers that be agreed. At that time the depot was on the first floor where the old manual catalogues are now housed. Wouna Rabe, a cataloguer who worked in the cataloguing section, taught me the basics of running a manual library. If I remember correctly, the depot at that time fell under what was then Cape Town Region who supplied me with new books and collected those I had weeded. New books were chosen by the book selectors of each category, NF, EF, JNF, EJF, AJF and the returned books were filed away by the staff of Room 101. Often 101 staff failed to turn up, so I got fed up and upped and filed my own books. The book selectors were constantly duplicating titles and had no idea what my borrowers were reading, so I asked each and every one whether I could choose my own books and they were only too happy to pass the task on to me. (This type of thing was not done in those days, but I was an awful civil servant.)

‘I simply cannot remember why or when the depot was moved to the back of the second floor and then across to the front of the third floor, where the Publication and Promotions Section now is, and what was in those days Registry, and then back to the back of the third floor. Presumably the first move had to do with moving the wooden catalogues into the room where they now are and the others also to do with changing office space.

‘What I do remember is when Registry had to move, one of my borrowers was relocated to Wale Street. She was devastated that she would no longer be able to borrow books so I said I would choose books for her and send them on the combi to Wale Street. This started the service of either sending books by combi up to Wale Street, or me delivering to 9 Dorp Street and the Government Garage (the latter is done to this day). This service lasted for years. However, I eventually had to stop the Wale Street combi deliveries, and delivered the books myself, as books were being stolen.

‘Hospital Street Library has always been somewhat of an anomaly and management never quite knew under which region it should resort. So, over the years responsibility of the depot was being shifted from region to region — Cape Town Region, Robertson Region, Stellenbosch Region, Bellville Region, and ultimately Tygerberg Region under which it still falls. In all those years, until former director Mr Frans van der Merwe decided he wanted to create a model library and moved the depot to its present location on the third floor, I ran the depot autonomously. I never had assistance from any of the regions and the only assistance over the years was from Gerda Theron, Sandra Kingswell (nee Hoefer), Carol Bew and Martina Scoltz.

‘This also meant that I did not answer to anyone, unless there was something major that needed discussing and then I would go to whoever was in charge of whatever department I was working in at that time. I never really had anyone who was in charge of me so I can only assume that management knew I was doing an OK job.

‘At some stage during her career the Depot was run for approximately a year by Elna Cecil (now retired) and was located on the third floor where the Central Collection offices now are. Memories of other staff who also helped in the library are Babette (I can’t remember her surname) and Martina Scoltz.’

Pendy ran the library until her retirement after which it was taken over by Sandra Kingswell, assisted by Gerda Theron.

Sadly we have not been able to find much archival material on the depot but could at least tap Pendy’s brain for some information. Any information that our readers can supply would be greatly appreciated.

NOTE: Library staff are encouraged to make use of this amazing facility. To have a library at one’s workplace is truly a privilege. And, to be able to sit back for a few moments every day and read the latest magazine or a selection of newspapers, with lovely soft music in the background, an even bigger privilege.

Kuyasa Public Library opens its doors

A success story from day one by Thandiwe Mtshengu

Kuyasa Public Library opened its doors to the public on 26 January 2016 and buzzed from day one with every space being occupied by adults, learners and children. One hears the buzz as learners enter the building in the afternoons, coming straight from school to the library to do their projects and then off home either on foot, by bus, taxi or train.

The library proudly offers a variety of facilities to the community and friendly and professional staff are on hand to offer orientation tours of the innovative, eco-friendly and environmentally sustainable building. Talks, special events and displays may be arranged on request. An enclosed study area that seats 180 people enables and encourages collaborative work space and a dedicated training room is available which, through partnerships, offers members of the community the opportunity to enhance their skills through various innovative programmes. 35 Smartcape computers are available for adults.

Determining our first circulation figures was the most exciting part for the staff as we know in some communities people first have to get used to the idea of a new library before they actually use it, so it was exciting to see that books are being checked out regularly. We are working very hard as a team to maintain the high circulation rate.

Our membership has also taken off quite surprisingly, mostly in the intermediate category. This has happened without us having membership drives or a marketing initiative. We look forward to the membership drives planned for the fourth quarter of the year (and the increase in membership).
Since the official opening on 26 January 2016 we have presented some very popular activities.

Storytelling sessions

We have already had 42 storytelling sessions which were attended by 1,177 children ranging from five to eleven years. The stories were read from our exciting new collection of picture books. Most of these sessions are held in the morning and are planned in conjunction with the crèches in the area. The staff also has storytelling sessions in the afternoons when the library gets very crowded — all in an effort to encourage the love for books and to keep the little ones busy. We also have surprise visits from crèches for storytelling sessions.

Holiday programmes

During the holiday periods in March and June we organised ten activities and 458 children between the ages of five and twelve attended. The programmes included a variety of activities: brain challenge games (the children did an Easter word search); dot-to-dot games; colouring-in; an Easter bunny maze; completion of an Easter vocabulary worksheet; creating a bunny mask and listening to a story; an Easter egg treasure hunt (the Easter eggs were hidden outside the library); a health and safety programme during which the children’s librarian explained why it is important to know about their health and safety in the library (after the talk the children were asked questions about what they were told); a reading treasure hunt where children chose their own books to read; and a cupcake decorating session.

During the winter holiday programme activities included: winter crafts (making a snowman); winter Pictionary (children were divided into eight groups) and winter storytelling and showing DVDs; the librarian used the title When will it snow by Kathryn White. There was also face painting.

DEDICATED SPACES FOR USERS

Kuyasa Library’s living spaces celebrate the concept of a library as a life-long learning centre. The library caters for every age group in the community and offers ongoing activities and programmes of age-specific interest. There are comfortable spaces to get together and also private spaces.

Ultimately, the Kuyasa Public Library aims to provide the Khayelitsha community with a space where they can develop their knowledge base as well as basic literacy skills. The library is an area for residents to learn and become connected as well as to help them achieve their employment goals.

Play space for kids

The children’s library offers the following for the under twelves: a wide variety of picture books; nursery rhymes and easy readers; and general fiction and non-fiction as well as reference titles. There are five dedicated computers based in the children’s library and a variety of activities are offered: library education; reading programmes; storytelling; arts and crafts sessions; holiday programmes; special and celebratory events; and crèche and school visits.

The teen scene

The teenagers’ section of the library is self-contained, allowing young people between the ages of twelve to eighteen both privacy and freedom. It has the following facilities: WiFi and Internet connection; SmartCape computer work stations; music listening posts; Xbox consoles for gaming; appealing reading material and magazines; and peer group and specialised holiday programmes.
For the more mature
The adult section of the library boasts a broad variety of resources; fiction and non-fiction titles, such as a collection of Westerns, large-print books, easy readers and isiXhosa reading material. Current magazines and newspapers, reference material in both print and electronic format, listening posts to explore the music collection, audiovisual material such as CDs and DVDs, 35 SmartCape public access computer and reading areas that make the most of the spectacular views and sunshine.

Enjoying the golden years
The seniors’ section is a user-friendly space dedicated especially to the over 60s where they can learn, socialise and hold meetings. On offer are computer facilities to encourage the use of technology, a television screen for movies and videos, comfortable seating, a kitchen area and regular programmes of interest.

Utilisation of various spaces
The kind of overwhelming response that the library has had to date shows the need for a fully equipped library and the fact that every space is utilised fully on a daily basis.

COMMENTS FROM OUR VISITORS
• Unique, one of its own and can accommodate every age group.
• Great library indeed — very nice and friendly staff.
• I like the computer room for elders.
• This is going to be an incredible space — very excited to see it open. - Frankie, Open Book
• The library is well equipped and the building is suitable for everyone with or without a disability.
• Visiting the library for the first time has been an amazing experience; you have set the bar really high for the other existing and new libraries. Good luck with the road forward in serving the community of Kuyasa and its surroundings with the best reference resources. - Luke Jaftha
• When I saw this library it was just a surprise, it gave me the understanding that we must pay for our services so that we can improve in our areas. - PA Mpengu
• Upon arriving at this facility I was greeted by Thulani and after a short introduction he took us on a tour of the library. Having recently relocated from Gauteng, I was dumbfounded by the neatness, updatedness of the facility, I am humbled and grateful. Keep it up COCT. - Mandisa Makaluza

It is encouraging to see that our online Library, Literature and Information Science database (which benefits all stakeholders in the Library Science and Information Science (LIS) field affiliated to Western Cape libraries), is showing ever-growing usage since the Library Service has subscribed to it in the second last quarter of 2013. Now in its third year of subscription, usage figures for this e-resource have year on year more than doubled with a quarter of 2016 still ahead.

For those who are not yet familiar with this resource, which specifically aims to provide librarians and their staff as well as all library users in Western Cape with professional literature in the LIS field, herewith a short overview of what the database offers:

- it indexes 470 magazines in the LIS field
- it makes full text articles available of 180 LIS journals
- articles are available as soon as they are published
- the database is open to all library staff and users of all Western Cape public libraries
- RSS feeds for special topics of interest can be set up (please see our article on how to do this in the July/August 2015 Cape Librarian, pp 62-63, available online at https://www.westerncape.gov.za/assets/departments/cultural-affairs-sport/ja15_cape_librarian_small.pdf)
- LIS students benefit especially, as they can do research for their studies at their local library
- all issues of the Cape Librarian journal since 2004 are indexed in the database (currently articles are not available in full text on the database yet, but they will hopefully be available in the future). In the meantime all articles of the Cape Librarian can be accessed in full text via the following link: https://www.westerncape.gov.za/dept/cas/documents/mags/1539
- Library Literature & Information Science Full Text provides PDF page images of all full-text articles, including charts, graphs, photos and other important graphical information with coverage dating as far back as 1980.

A step-by-step guide on how to use the database was provided in the Jan/Feb issue of the Cape Librarian (pp 36-37). You can access the article online at https://www.westerncape.gov.za/assets/departments/cultural-affairs-sport/ff15_cape_librarian_small.pdf

In an effort to make the vast amount of information in the database even more accessible to librarians, the Research Section has set up links to the content pages of 29 of the most prominent LIS journals electronically. These content pages can now be sent to librarians via e-mail as and when the new editions of magazines become available. The Research Section will, however, also scan these content pages for articles of interest and regularly publish a shortened list of these in the Cape Librarian.

Once librarians and other interested users of the database want to access an article from the electronic content pages, a simple click on the title of the article takes the reader directly into the text of the article.

Links to the content pages of the following journals are now available:

The Pearl of Africa

Library leaders from Uganda to Seychelles by Christelle Lubbe

The first sub-Saharan Africa International Network of Emerging Library Innovators (INELI) programme was presented in Entebbe, Uganda, this year. I was one of eight mentors chosen to support and lead the 32 innovators selected from 14 sub-Saharan African countries: Benin, Gambia, Ghana, Kenya, Malawi, Namibia, Nigeria, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, South Africa, Tanzania, Uganda, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

INELI is a programme run by Global Libraries (Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation) which has been successfully rolled out to different regions, for example, the Middle East, North Africa, India, the Balkans, Latin America, Asia and now sub-Saharan Africa.

African Library & Information Associations & Institutions (AFLIA) realised that African librarians need to work together and learn from one other. Although our countries are different, our communities have similar needs and sometimes ingenious answers to solve problems. Our unique approach to challenges and even our positive attitudes, often amidst a sea of despair, can best be understood by fellow Africans. To enable inspirational and passionate... librarians to become knowledgeable and confident leaders will sustain and improve public libraries in Africa. AFLIA and Global Libraries are partnering together to realise AFLIA’s vision of building a critical mass of innovative, sustainable public libraries — led by knowledgeable, motivated professionals.

The packed five-day programme included presentations by all the innovators (dressed in traditional costume), lectures on self-leadership, neuro-semantic pre-suppositions for leadership, the science of human communication, foundational skills for building relationships, as well as ‘talk tables’ where methods of preserving community history, mobilising the community and measuring the impact of the library, to name a few, were discussed.

During the evenings we met with the other mentors and worked out strategies to support the group during the two-year online (Moodle) programme. I had four innovators in my group, three of whom came from Uganda and one from Zimbabwe. I was humbled by their shared experiences and by how little they have in their libraries. I loved the passion and the immediate rapport between us and especially the new ideas we could share to assist each other with problems. I could see why they were chosen to be part of this programme, as they all clearly had a ‘think outside the box’- approach to challenges.

Uganda was called the ‘Pearl of Africa’ by Winston Churchill in his book My African journey, written in 1908. I was in Uganda for five days and must admit that I did not have enough time to experience ‘the pearl’. Our hotel, the Imperial Botanical Beach Hotel, is located in Entebbe, a few minutes from the airport. We stayed on the banks of tranquil Lake Victoria. The hotel clearly dated from the glory days of colonial dependence and had many over-the-top luxury features.

We also visited Kampala, the capital of Uganda. Kampala is only 42km from Entebbe, but the journey took more than three hours. Although there is a beautiful tarred road (the main road between the airport and the capital), a few factors combined to impede the trip. I initially thought that there were too many cars on the road as there were cars as far as the eye could see. Then I thought the reason was probably the absence of traffic signs anywhere. Maybe it was the endless patience that people display even when the seventh car just pushed ahead of us from nowhere: no road rage or even a twinge of discomfort was shown by other road users.

What rather astounded me was the spectacle when President Yoweri Kaguta Museveni and his wife and family members passed by in gleaming brand-new SUVs. The 71-year-old president, who is now serving for the fifth term in 26 years, has a seventeen-car convoy. His daily procession includes his private guards, army officials, his physician and his ablution caravan and cars with black-tinted windows speeding past while traffic on both sides remains stationary. These heightened security measures were even felt at the hotel, where soldiers with fully-automatic weapons were part of the daily scene.

Uganda is beautiful and it felt as if I had just popped over to KwaZulu-Natal for a few days. The weather stayed the same for the duration of the trip and the vegetation is very green. As explained to me, most people make ends meet from what Mother Nature provides — as far as the eye could see there were people selling vegetables, matoki (green bananas), pineapples, chickens and sugar cane. That was not all: beds, windows, clothing, peanuts, matrasses, Tupperware, everything bar the kitchen sink was bartered at the side of the road and I could buy practically anything from my bus window. I had a difficult choice between a loaf of local bread and a bottle of beer for a mere 3,000 Ugandan shillings (approximately R15.00). The Ugandan people are very friendly, innovative and hardworking and it is clear they will always find ways to put food on the table...

I don’t know why it therefore shocked me to find books locked in cages at the Kampala City Library. I should have known that the thriving second hand book market must have a source somewhere ... They found unique solutions for age-old public library problems: for every ten new books received a month, eight disappeared within two days of presenting it to the public. Their solution: put all books in locked cages.

Our visit to the Kampala Library and Information Centre shocked me for a few other reasons as well. This is their City Library that they are very proud of. It is an annex to the huge municipal building and was built in the year 2000. It used to have a children’s library wing within the municipality, but it closed down because the children were ‘too noisy for the adults’.

The library has five brand-new computers in the business centre and usage is free. A nominal fee is paid for printing, though. The library also provides free Wi-Fi, but all laptops must be registered at the counter before taking them into the centre. Users’ IDs, serial numbers of the laptops and proof of ownership are verified before leaving the building.

As they have so many books that are never returned after being checked out, the librarians have streamlined their membership procedures. Each adult who wants to become a member of the library has to produce a stamp from the local ward councillor, who has to vouch for their trustworthiness as a local citizen. Once one has been rubber-stamped, one may visit the library regularly and use the books. Ten US dollars (33,800 Ugandan shillings) per annum allows one to borrow two books every two weeks. Unfortunately children are not allowed to join or to visit the library without parents; they are also not allowed to borrow any books. Parents may borrow books for their children on their annual library card but the limit of two books per person still applies.

I spoke to a local patron, Henry Nyakoojo, who visits the library daily. He is a retired businessman who uses the computers and reads the newspapers. He shared information on the background of Kampala city life and how difficult it is to survive in a city with a daytime population of over 2.5 million people. He and most of his peers are very well educated but he fears that the education system has not been so kind to the younger generation. He admits that it will be a long time before a reading culture for the children is established as reading material is very scarce. He also admits that he does not visit the library to borrow or read books as he finds the stock too old and not to his interest.

I left Kampala Library with a heavy heart on that Saturday morning. The passionate young librarian shared all her new ideas and security interventions with us, very proud that book theft was reduced in her library. We left her after reading a book to the single child that was in the library at that time.

After another hour of driving (65km from Kampala) through beautiful rural areas, we came to the Nakaseke Public Library. The Nakaseke community is a small agricultural community mostly producing coffee, maize, matoki and beans. The population is approximately 4,500 people with 237 children in the local school. The Nakaseke Multipurpose Community Telecentre, erected in 1999, houses a small library, business centre, classroom and a community radio station.

Although the initial funding came from international resources, the community itself took ownership of the centre and manage their own security procedures to safeguard the library and equipment. They present numerous training, literacy and reading programmes to the community and even produce their own material (videos, documents, stories and more) in the local languages, Luganda and Swahili. The local farmers receive daily updates on weather patterns, crop information and price fluctuations. The radio station also broadcasts daily prayers, talks for women, sport and news. The sms and radio service has a radius of 20 kilometres but people frequently experience power problems. They have solar panels but the batteries need changing and a generator is too costly to support. It was interesting that they approached the theft of books differently: if a book was lost (mostly by students commuting to Kampala) they had to pay the costs of two books to replace the one lost.

Peter Balaba, the local librarian, is indeed a true hero of this community and clearly proud of his and his volunteers’ achievements.

My brief was to go to Central Africa as a mentor to inspire and motivate. I received so much inspiration from fellow librarians that I came back buzzing with ideas and new innovations. I found people who try every day, even though there is no reward, no recognition and nobody that understands their efforts. In Uganda, I found a country absolutely vandalised by war and greed but beautiful on the inside. People, who could not find leaders to be proud of, created their own leaders from within. These are the people who will make Africa great.

As part of INELI we are helping to create African leaders within public libraries who will slowly create change from within the system to restore the Pearl of Africa.

Kampala Public Library — books are kept behind lock and key
Die laaste woord

Woorde is logies, maar...

Tegnologie is nie my vriend nie deur Francois Bloemhof

Ek is ’n skrywer, daarom is woorde my vriende. En ek gebruik ’n rekenaar, is bedrewe met ’n selfoon, mikrogolfoond en ’n hele paar goed wat biep.

Nogtans het ek ’n diep en donker geheim, naamlik dat ek nie altyd so tegnologies bedrewe is as wat die moderne mens veronderstel is om te wees nie. Ek weet hoe woorde werk, en die meeste van die tyd werk hulle vir my, maar as dit by dáárdie goed kom …

Dis geen sonde nie — behalwe dat daar mense is wat jou so wil laat dink. Kyk na ’n paar advertensies en jy sal sien wat die moderne mens veronderstel is om te wees nie. Ek weet hoe woorde werk, en die meeste van die tyd werk hulle vir my, maar as dit by dáárdie goed kom …

Dis geen sonde nie — behalwe dat daar mense is wat jou so wil laat dink. Kyk na ’n paar advertensies en jy sal sien wat die moderne mens veronderstel is om te wees nie. Ek weet hoe woorde werk, en die meeste van die tyd werk hulle vir my, maar as dit by dáárdie goed kom …

maar hoe kry ek dit daar as dit nie wil loop nie?
   Maar! Toe 'n vriend sê hy wil tog net 'n bietjie onder die enjinkap vroetel, net om te kyk of … vat die enjin onmiddellik. Die motor is weer reg!
   Ek neem dit nietemin om gediens te word en die mense sê dit is honderd persent.
   Twee dae later beteken honderd persent dat die kar 'n wind sluk, en hop-hop-ruk-ruk ek huis toe. Later die dag hop-hop-ruk-ruk ek na die agentskap wat die kar gediens het. Goed, hulle sal die volgende oggend kyk. Ja, hulle besef dat hulle gesê het dis honderd persent en dis nou hulle verantwoordelijkheid.
   Toe hulle egter die volgende oggend inklusief om die kar te toets, gee hy weer vir hulle sy samewerking, honderd persent.
   Dis hoekom ek finaal weet tegnologie is nie my vriend nie. Veral nie daai kar nie. Elke keer as hy 'n bietjie gerus het, is hy piekfyyn, net om my skielik halfpad deur 'n rysessie te laat ruk asof ek in my eie klein disko vasgekeer is.
   Nou het ek darem tot 'n bevrydende besef gekom wat ek graag deel met almal wat al gewens het skakelaars en knoppeies en goete kan so logies werk soos woorde in 'n sin. Almal wat al tot by 'n kitsbank gevorder het, net om skielik hulle PIN te vergeet. Of wat voor 'n rekenaar gesit en 'n wagwoord probeer onthou het terwyl die skerm hulle kil aanky. Hier is dit:
   As die skeppers van moderne tegnologie regtig so slim is, sal hulle produkte ontwerp wat bestand is teen ons onnoselikhede. Produkte wat nie so oorreageer as dit verkeerd gebruik word nie. En wat sommer enigeen kan regmaak.
   Dit is nie ons wat nie gereed is vir die tegnologiese eeu nie. Dit is nog nie reg vir ons nie.
