Preface

The incidence of domestic violence appears to be continually on the increase in South Africa, particularly against women and children. Existing measures to protect victims from domestic violence have proved to be inadequate, ineffective and biased against the victims.

Violence occurring in the home can have at least two damaging consequences. Firstly, it sends the message to the young that violence is an acceptable way of resolving conflict. In this manner, the young are socialised to accept violence as a normal way of life. Thus, it increases the probability of generating a cycle of violence. Secondly, domestic violence traumatises the victims and violates their rights. A debilitating cycle of violence from which the victim, increasingly, cannot escape, is usually the scenario (normally described as the Battered Women's/Person's Syndrome). This can then lead to repeat victimisation/repeat offending. In certain circumstances this can eventually spiral into fatality.

As a result of the debilitating impact of domestic violence on individuals and families Government and Civil Society has established various services to support the victims and to raise awareness at community level.

This National Directory was developed in partnership with the provincial Victim Empowerment Programme Managers/Coordinators and their provincial counterparts. A special word of thanks to the Western Cape Network on Violence against Women who developed the Directory for the Western Cape Department of Social Development.

The National Directory is compiled in alphabetical order according to provinces and provides information on the network of services and the protocol for the referral of victims of violence in South Africa, such as:

1. Government Services:
 - Social services
 - Health services
 - Justice services
 - South African Police Service
 - Complaints mechanism
2. Non-Governmental organisations
3. Shelters or overnight facilities
4. List of shelters

If you encounter any constraints in utilising the services or want to become involved in rendering services, contact your provincial and/or regional Victim Empowerment Programme Managers/Coordinators as indicated on the first page of the provincial information.

The details of the specific services often change. Therefore, users are welcome to amend and/or to make suggestions towards further refinement of the National Directory on Services for Victims of Violence.

This Department wishes you well with all your endeavours.
