

Educate yourself @ your library

OLIVIA PEACH
Graphic Designer

Our display is about that time of the year again, Library Week. This year, we decided to use the LIASA Library Week theme in our artwork as well, to avoid any confusion with regards to this very important week in the library calendar.

The idea behind this display is to use the promotional material that you have received in a way that will emphasise the theme. We decided to highlight some educational books that could assist people in deciding the career they would like to enter, as well as using some DIY books, to illustrate that one can also educate oneself by learning a new skill.

A few additional elements that we used to make the display a little more pleasing to the eye are graduation hats cut from black board (enlarge the sample on this page), a frame with a picture of a graduate (both these images were Googled). We also placed one or two bookmarks in books, to create the impression that the books are being read. Then we rolled up some sheets of paper and tied them with ribbon, to simulate diplomas or degrees.

And last, but not least, we used the Library Week poster as a background image.

Good luck with your displays, and we hope that they inspire your patrons to educate themselves!

CL